

The media ownership laws do not need to be laxened anymore. The current state of media ownership is dismal, if not alarmingly dangerous. There is no institution with more potential to damage this country than a communications industry that is not operating in the public interest, rather than forwarding the agenda of a handful of multi-billion dollar corporations.